

I am a descendant of the Cherokee East Band and a lifelong animal lover who discovered at an early age I had the gift of vision. I am considered a “Seer.”

Later in life, after many animals came to me, I consulted with Anita Curtis, a renowned animal communicator and former student of Penelope Smith. After talking with Anita, she encouraged me to attend an Animal Communication workshop. I found that I was able to make telepathic connections with animals in a variety of situations. Anita was pleased to be a part of this journey and worked with me as a guide and coach.

I believe my spiritual journey is to help the animals, and I also do clairvoyant readings, spiritual guidance work for people, and identify animal totems. I am available to give talks and workshops as well as visits to facilities for communications.

I have had various pets through this lifetime. My companion at this time is Kwahu, a Hopi word for Eagle, an intuitive Husky dog who is never far from my side.

At daybreak I hike or jog with Kwahu through the wilderness trails in the mountains near my home. I greet the owls, who are returning from their night of hunting, the rattlesnakes searching for a sunny rock to warm their bodies, the deer carefully picking their way through the underbrush, and the roadrunners frantically dashing across the trail. The messages come from all the wild ones around, as well as those from my ancestors, who are pleased with the choices I am making.

I go out for another hike as the sun sets and thank my guides for the day.

When I communicate with an animal, it is with the utmost respect and compassion, and I treat each one as a cherished individual who has important messages and experiences to share. I approach every animal client with an open mind and an open heart, and consider myself privileged that they choose to confide in me.
